- After late September 1952, source observed that 150 to 200 men, and women were engaged in the cutting of wood, uprooting and grading work near Bremenhain. At the same time, the area was being leveled using debris which arrived on wood gas powered vehicles.
- 2. Workers said that they did construction work on an airfield although, when being hired, they had been told that a large athletic field was to be built. In and women received 1.37 eastmarks per hour and an additional 6.00 eastmarks per day, probably compensation for separation from their families. The workers were issued good food free of charge. According to the workers, about 200 persons were employed at the field, and their number was to be increased soon.
- 3. An employee of the Joerlitz labor office stated that an airfield, referred to as athletic field, was under construction near Bremerhain. About 300 laborers were required for the project. Although a high pay was promised, it was difficult to hire this number of workers. The laborers were suspicuous and believed that they would later be drafted for work for a lower pay.
